The Eggs That Never Hatch.

There's a young man on the corner, Filled with life, and strength, and hope, Looking far beyond the present.

With the whole world in his scope, He is grasping at to-morrow,
That phantom none can catch;

To-day is lost. He's waiting For the eggs that never hatch.

There's an old man over yonder, With a worn and weary face,
With searching, anxious features, And weak, uncertain pace.

He is living in the future,
With no desire to catch The golden Now. He's waiting
For the eggs that never hatch.

There's a world of men and women, With their life's work yet undone, Who are sitting, standing, moving Beneath the same great sun;

Ever eager for the future,
But not content to snatch The Present. They are waiting
For the eggs that never hatch.

—Merchant Traveler.

The best rat exterminator ever chloride of lime. This is thrown liberally about their holes and

The Druggists Journal reports a case of poisoning from postage-stamps. It seems that the gum on the back is capable, under certain conditions, of absorbing foreign matters floating in the air.

Do you think you could carve the turkey, Mr. O' Dynamite?
He said the landlady to her new boarder. "Well I should blush to hesitate. Why I was one of the men who helped to blow up hell gate." —New York Journal.

A writer in the New York Tribune is told that Robert Bonner is making a curious provision for continuing the Ledger after his death in the same style in which he has been conducting it for about thirty years. He holds, it is understood, that it will take his successor fully three years to learn his methods so as to select the class of literary matter which has given the Ledger its peculiar success. He has therefore, begun to collect extra material with the design of securing enough to last three years after his death. Already about enough copy for one year, or fifty-two numbers has been accumulated.

When persons find their eyes becoming dry and itching in reading, as well as those who find it necessary to place an object more than 14 inches from their face to read, they need spectacles. Spectacles sold by peddlers and jewellers generally are hurtful to the eyes of those who read much, as the lenses are made of inferior glass, and are not symmetrically ground.
Unless the lenses are mounted in a suitable frame and properly placed before the eye, discomfort will arise from their prolonged use. The proper time to begin wearing glasses is just as soon as the eyes tire on being subjected to prolonged use.—Medical Herald.

The New York Tribune publishes an interview with a physician who emphatically declared that the dementia of Dr. Brailley of this city was not due to the use of cocaine, and that there was no danger of a "cocaine habit." Natives of South America, numbering 8,000,000, use coca leaves, which enable them to endure extreme vicissitudes. Cocaine belonged to the tea and coffee family, and its effects, in a more marked degree, were the same as those of theine and caffeine, the active principles of tea and coffee. It did not belong to the family of powerful drugs in which were found opium, hashish, and chloral. Heretofore cocaine as one of the greatest discoveries of the day.

The Denver Journal of Commerce reports that the slag resulting from the smelting of copper, gold and silver ores at Argo is now being returned in the shape of a beautiful table-ware. The colors are a sort of opal and opal flashed in waves throughout the ware.
The glass works where it is made say they have direct control over these colors, the slag containing a larger per cent of material necessary than can be found in slag elsewhere. It is melted at an intense heat, then poured into vats of agitated water, then remelted and poured into molds after or together with an acid mixture, which causes the metal to flake pretty generally with added materials. The result is a metallic glass with the strength of light cast iron, and in any form of tableware, bowls, cups, tumblers, etc., with the most beautiful sprays of opal stone colors upon a general background of opal.

A Smart Trick.

By the way of Boston and the Every Other Saturday newspaper comes a queer story of a Liverpool bank official who recently received a private letter from his friend, a member of a London banking firm. It said that one of their employees, the son of their highly esteemed cashier—a man who is probably itself—had gone away with several thousand pounds in securities. If the son should be arrested and placed in a prisoner's dock, the old man would never lift his head again. The firm was, therefore, resolved to do all that lay in its power to save its aged and valued servant from the misery and shame which would certainly overtake him if his son's sin became known.

The writer thought that in all probability the young man would call with his securities at the Liverpool bank, and on the strength of his connection with the London bank, try to negotiate them. If so, the London banker wanted the Liverpool banker to seize the property and keep it until he heard from the London banker again; to lecture the young man soundly, buy him a ticket to New York, and give him $1,000 with which to begin the world again. The London banker was going to Paris for a fortnight, so the Liverpool banker didn't need to write him about the affair until that time. He also wanted the secret kept from everybody, as far as possible, both for the sake of the London bank, the young man's father, and the young man himself.

The Liverpool banker, knowing that many a young man had gone wrong who might have been saved at the proper moment, decided to comply with his friend's request.

Soon after a nice, frank-looking young man of the name referred to was ushered in to him, and saying that he desired to travel explained in a constrained and nervous manner that he had some securities on which he would like to realize. He said he didn't understand business, and perhaps was going awkwardly to work, but the ship for New York was to sail that day and he was in a hurry.

In reply the Liverpool banker handed him the letter he had just received. As he read it his breast heaved with emotion, tears came into his eyes, he finally burst into a fit of weeping. He made a full confession, and then the banker, after pointing out the heinousness of his crime, offered to do as the letter requested. The young man kissed the banker's hand in token of his gratitude, said he had been both foolish and wicked, and would gladly go to another country and redeem himself.

The banker gave him the $1,000, bought him a first-class steamer ticket, and gave him a champagne dinner at the restaurant. But nothing he could say or do seemed to raise the young man's spirits.
He was so sad and broken down that the banker really pitied him.
As he bade him good-by from the ship's side the hard old man could not restrain his tears as he thought of the young and repentant sinner he had saved from a life of crime.

At the end of the fortnight, when he supposed the London banker would have got back from Paris, the Liverpool banker wrote to him in great glee of his success in carrying out his wishes, and of the contrite youth who had set sail for new scenes with the banker's blessing.

He got the following reply from London:

"You must be mad. Our cashier never had a son. No securities missing. Perhaps you have been sold."

It was true. He had. The letter was forged. The securities were worthless. He had thrown away $1,000, a passage to New York, a bottle of champagne, a good dinner, and a good deal of advice upon an ingenious swindler.

The constitution of a celebrated grease eradicator, the right to aires, is as follows: Ammonia, two ounces; soft water, one quart; sal-petre, one teaspoonful; fine soap, in shavings, one ounce; mix thoroughly and keep in covered vessels.

H. M. Taylor, Secretary of the International Range Cattle and Horse Growers' Association, has issued a call for the first convention of range cattlemen, to be held at Denver on January 27, 1886.

Give to us all the range possible in winter: they are open air birds and must have exercise.

Bismarck Indignant.

The report that Prince Bismarck is not over-lord of America is partly true. He certainly has great reason to feel seriously disgruntled. He hates our pork, when the truth is, it is native German pork which killed a score of his countrymen. He has tried to close the German market to our petroleum, and pretends to prefer the vile smell of the Eastern product to our refined manufacture.
And now he shows considerable ill temper by expelling certain American citizens from his master's territory.

The Prince's unhappy state of mind is easily understood, and we can forgive him for being jealous of our prosperity. He wants more able-bodied soldiers; but the strong men whom he would like to conscript suddenly disappear, and when next seen they are on the rich lands of our great West, with an ax, a plow, a wife, and a cheery little cabin. He finds it impossible to stop emigration. Enterprising Germans who do not care to become a target to step bullets, who wish to make a home and a record for themselves, and who cannot have either under the Prince, put their little will in a meal-sack and start for this side of the ocean. Here they become prosperous citizens. They acquire position and perhaps wealth, and avoid the demoralizing influences of long military service.
Their lot is in every way to be preferred to their inevitable fate in their native land. We are not surprised that the prince chews the end of disappointment or that he utters a growl now and then.
Still, our country is large, and so long as men and women can get a better living in America than elsewhere the tide of immigration will
